

REFERENCE CHECKING TIP SHEET

WHY CHECK REFERENCES?

References help you get the full picture of the candidate's skills, work habits and personality. They serve as an important tool to evaluate a candidate's fit with your job and organization.

REFERENCE CHECKING TIPS

PRIOR TO MAKING THE CONTACT

- Review the questions on the Reference Check Sheet (see reverse). Add any questions specific to your job.
- Determine who you will contact for reference.
- Ideally, it is helpful to get references from a combination of people who can discuss the candidate's skills and work habits (e.g., prior supervisors, peers, subordinates and clients).
- At a minimum, contact the applicant's current or most recent supervisor.
At an earlier stage (during the interview), you should have informed your candidates that you might be contacting their current/previous supervisors for references. If your candidate requested to be contacted prior to you calling, respect and follow up on that request.

DURING THE CONTACT

- Start by asking straightforward employment facts (dates of employment, title, etc.), then move on to more open-ended questions.
- Be friendly and conversational when talking with a reference giver to help them feel more comfortable. Be attentive to a person's style and tone of voice.
- Use a behavior-based approach to focus on a candidate's past performance in specific situations (Example: "Tell me about a time when...").
- Take notes using the Reference Check Sheet.

POST CONTACT

- Review your notes. Does anything particular stand out (good or bad)?
- For additional assistance regarding checking references, please contact your Human Resources (HR) professional.
